Des gémissements sortent des tilleuls ;
Les squelettes blancs vont à travers l'ombre,
Courant et sautant sous leur grands linceuls.

Zig et Zig et Zag, chacun se trémousse,
On entend claquer les os des danseurs.

OVERTURE, "DER FREISCHÜTZ."

WEBER.

The word which shows what the opera of "Der Freischütz" meant to Germany was spoken by Weber's son in his biography of his father. He writes: "Weber did not compose 'Der Freischütz'. He allowed it to grow out of the rich soil of his brave German heart, and to expand leaf by leaf, blossom by blossom, fostered by the hand of his talent. Thus no German looks upon the opera as a work of art which appeals to him from without. He feels as if every line of the work came from his own heart, as if he himself had dreamed it so, and it could no more sound otherwise than the rustling of an honest German beech-wood." "Der Freischütz" was written while Weber was director of the opera at Dresden; court jealousies hindered its completion, and were the cause of its being first produced elsewhere. Berlin heard the opera for the first time, June 18, 1821, Weber conducting. Everything went badly at the final rehearsal, and all save the composer despaired; he came to his home, wrote the lovely Concertstück, returned to the theatre, and triumphed. This is what he said of the performance: "Der Freischütz." Received with the most incredible enthusiasm. Overture and folk-song relearned, and fourteen pieces out of seventeen loudly applauded. Everything went in excellent style, and all of them sang with love. I was recalled and took Mme. Seidler and Mlle. Enncke out with me, as I could not get hold of the other. Poems and wreaths flew about.—Soli Deo Gloria!" In the overture to "Der Freischütz" Weber breaks away from previous models. The overtures of Gluck and Mozart were complete pieces in themselves, scarce making reference to the dramas they were written to precede; but Weber makes of the overture an epitome of the opera. He followed the same plan in the overtures to "Euryanthe" and "Oberon." Julius Benedict, Weber's pupil, says of the innovation: "The system, according to the most competent critics, interfered materially with the perfect musical form of the overture, but the effect produced was magical. . . . It is unquestionable that for coloring, characteristic and poetical feeling, these orchestral preludes are unparalleled." After the lovely horn passage with which the overture to "Der Freischütz" begins, the motives from Max's scene in act one, the incantation music, Agathe's moonlight scene, and the episodes connected with the action of Max and Caspar, follow.

FANTASIE FOR VIOLIN, OP. 46.

WITH ACCOMPANIMENT OF HARP AND ORCHESTRA. BRUCH.

Besides his two concertos, Bruch has written a number of concert pieces for violin and orchestra, the Fantasie Ecossaise, and the Fantasie played to-day, being most important. The prominence given the harp in the accompaniment of the Fantasie op. 46, makes that composition unique among its fellows, though the composer's catalogue shows him combining the harp and orchestra with the cello ("Koi Nidrei"). Bruch dedicates the Fantasie op. 46, which was published in 1880, to Pablo Sarasate. Scotch airs are, to a considerable extent, its melodical basis, while in the title is seen justification of the liberties in form which mark the work.

SYMPHONY No. 8, IN B MINOR. (UNFINISHED.)

WEBER.

The two movements, and nine bars of a third of Schubert's symphony in B minor, constitute, perhaps, the loveliest fragment in music. Why the work was not completed is not known; the date of the allegro, Oct. 30, 1822, six years before Schubert's death, only makes the issue more confusing. The precious manuscript was probably pushed aside, and in the absorption of the composer in other works (the D minor quartet, the quartet in G, op. 161, and the ninth and tenth symphonies, are some of the compositions of Schubert's last years), forgotten. It remained in manuscript and unknown until 1867. The following lines of analysis constitute a compilation: The symphony has no introductory movement, as in other known symphonies of Schubert; the allegro begins at once with a mysterious passage in the cellos and basses, which is immediately followed by a melody of pathetic, yet wild, gipsy-like character in the oboe and clarinet, a touching combination, accompanied by the violins in a vague figure that lends to the weirdness of the melody a more appropriate colorit. The second theme is now introduced: a charming, artless melody, in everything but tenderness and beauty a complete contrast to the first, but in those qualities its peer. This second theme is in G. The transition from B minor to the new key is managed in a simple yet skillful manner, the long sustained D imparting a peculiar quality of suspense to the modulation. The new theme is first heard in the cellos, accompanied by a syncopated rhythm in the violins and clarinets. It is then taken up by the violins in octaves, played with and brought back again and again, and then interrupted by bursts of wild, half-savage modulation.

The second movement, andante con moto, if less tragic in tone, is not less touching than the allegro. It opens with a phrase in the horns, accompanied by the basses in a descending scale pizzicato, which leads into the melody of the principal theme given out by the violins, and serves to punctuate and divide the periods of the movement throughout. The second theme, heard first in the clarinet, and then in the oboe, and accompanied by an agitated figure in the violins and violas, is indescribably touching in its character. It is heralded by a short passage in the first violin alone, calling attention, and, as it were, proclaiming silence for it. Characteristic of Schubert as is this theme, the accompaniment is even more so. It is full of delicate enharmonic changes and subtle gradations of tone-color. In the later portion of the movement this theme is used in the basses, with an imitation in the first violins at one bar distance, producing the happiest effect. After this episode, the return to the first subject, piu mosso, is made by short phrases in the oboe, flute, clarinet and horns.

SYMPHONY No. 8, IN F.

BEETHOVEN.

The literature of the Eighth or "little" Symphony is copious and interesting. The work was written in the summer of 1812, while Beethoven was seeking health in a quiet Austrian town during what was one of the dreariest periods of his career: It followed the Seventh symphony after about five months. But the symphony shows the profoundest disregard of any such state, being the liveliest, cheeriest and jolliest of any of the nine. Berlioz said of the lovely theme of the allegretto scherzando, that "it had fallen entire from heaven into the mind of the composer, and that he had written it at a single sitting." The origin of this tune was far more human than the rhetorical Frenchman conceived, for it was originally the subject of a catch which Beethoven wrote to the following words: "Ta, ta, ta, lieber Mäzkel, lebe wohl sehr wohl." on the occasion of a supper given to "Mäzkel," the inventor of the metronome. Beethoven's sketch-books show that he bothered quite as much as usual with the several themes of the eighth symphony.

From an analysis of the symphony by Mr. Joseph Bennett: "The leading theme of the allegretto is given to the first violins, with answering phrases for the basses, the wind accompanying with repeated semiquavers. After his customary manner, the composer takes a figure from the theme and uses it in development till it suggests a tributary melody. Another subject presently appears, and completes the thematic resources of the movement. The original grace and beauty with which these materials are worked out have scarcely a parallel, especially as the qualities of grace and beauty are associated with quiet humor—a survival, perhaps, from the supper-table—expressed in the quaint interjections and imitations of wind and string, varied now and then by a brief fortissimo, as though by a roar of laughter. The coda is every bit as remarkable as any other part of the movement. With a waywardness beyond explanation, Beethoven stops his music in full career and winds up with a commonplace Italian cadence. It is as though a street band had played a Rossinian melody under his window and made the enraged musician, after scribbling a Rossinian peroration, fling down his pen in disgust.

A German writer has said of the entire work: "The effect of the symphony is entirely gay and untroubled; it awakens and sustains in the auditor a most refreshing feeling; no false notes come to disturb his quietude." This is true on the whole, but there are points in the finale not without their mystery and their wonder. We soon meet with one of them, and that in the very midst of the statement of a first subject quite Haydnesque in its homely, bucolic simplicity. No sooner is the theme completed, and before its repetition as a tutti, than a roaring C sharp is heard, given ff by all the instruments, brass excepted. This is no mere casual whim, as will presently appear. Meanwhile brisk development takes place, passing into C major, and then to A flat major by means of an interrupted cadence. This is the key of the second subject, stated by the violins upon a tonic pedal, briefly developed, and followed by a return of the first theme according to rondo form. Now the leading melody is subjected to further and more important treatment, with extensive use of contrary motion. This "working out" makes no use of the second motive, which, being sedate, can hardly enter into the rollicking humor of its companion. The lead up to the point where recapitulation begins again introduces the roaring C sharp, and is a passage of which no one save Beethoven would have dreamed. Repetition goes bravely on through the first and second subjects and their appendages till we reach the point where enters a new passage, which gives to the movement an element of dignity and even impressiveness, and leads to a splendid climax, from the height of which Beethoven proceeds to repeat a portion of his "working out" by way of introduction to the coda. The actual lead into the coda is the most remarkable part of the symphony. Berlioz has some interesting observations upon this passage. He says: "The third appearance of this strange entry (the C sharp) is of a quite different aspect; the orchestra, after having modulated into C, as before, strikes a real D flat, followed by a fragment of the theme in D flat, then a real C sharp, to which succeeds another snatch of the theme in C sharp minor; lastly resumes this same C sharp, and repeating it three times with redoubled force, the entire theme enters into F sharp minor. The note which had first figured as a minor sixth, becomes successively a flat major tonic, sharp minor tonic, and finally dominant. It is very curious." Of the coda, it suffices to say, that the work is by it brought to a strenuous and bustling close." Notes by G. H. Wilson.

THE LORELEY.

I know not whence comes the feeling
That I to sadness am so inclined;
A legend of days departed
I cannot chase from my mind.

The breeze comes soft, the day is fading,
And peaceful flows the Rhine;
The hill-tops all brightly gleaming
In evening sunlight shine.

And yonder sits a maiden
Of wondrous beauty rare;
With gold and with jewels sparkling
She combs her golden hair.

With comb of bright gold she combs it,
And sings with mournful sigh
A song of enchanting power,
A magic melody.

A boatman in frail bark gliding,
Dewilder'd by love's sweet pain,
He sees not the rocky ledges,
His eyes on the height remain.

The billows surrounding engulf him,
Both bark and boatman are gone!
This sorrow by charmed singing
The Loreley hath done.

ADIEUX DE L'HÔTESSE ARABE.

Puisque rien ne t'arrête en cet heureux pays, Ni l'ombre du palmier, ni le jaune maïs, Ni le repos, ni l'abondance ; Ni de voir à ta voix battre le jeune sein De nos sœurs, dont, les soirs le tour- noyant essaim, Couronne un coteau de sa danse ! Adieu beau voyageur !	Si tu l'avais voulu, peut-être une de nous O jeune homme, eut aimé te servir à genoux, Dans nos huttes toujours ouvertes, Elle eut fait, en bergant ton sommeil de ses chants Pour chasser de ton front les mouche- ons méchants, Un éventail de feuilles vertes.

Oh, que n'es-tu de ceux Qui donnent pour limite à leurs pieds paresseux Leur toit de branches ou de toiles ! Qui, rêveurs, sans en faire, écoutent les récits Et souhaitent les soirs devant leur porte assis, De s'en aller dans les étoiles ! Hélas !	Si tu ne reviens pas, songe un peu quelquefois Aux filles du désert, sœurs à la douce voix, Qui dansent, pieds nus, sur la dune, O beau jeune homme blanc, bel oiseau passager Souviens-toi, car peut-être, o rapide étranger, Ton souvenir reste à plus d'une ! Adieu, beau voyageur !

VICTOR HUGO.

FAIR ELLEN.

Sad and luckless was the season When to court fair Ellen flew ; Flew from love and peace and reason, Worlds to see of promise new. Back she comes, each grace is finer, Ev'ry charm that crowds adore ; All the form divine, diviner, But the heart is there no more.	Ellen, go, where crowds admire thee, Chariots rattle, torches blaze ; Here our dull content would tire thee, Worthless be our village praise. Go, yet, oh, that Thought's soft season Ellen's heart might yet restore ; Hard the task, (whate'er the reason), Hard the task, to love no more !

FAITHFU' JOHNNIE.

When will you come again, my faithfu' Johnnie, When will you come again ? "When the corn is gathered And the leaves are withered, Then I will come again, My sweet and bonnie, I will come again !"	O come na by the muir, my faithfu' Johnnie, O come na by the muir ! [white "Though the wraiths were glistening By the dim elf-candles' light, I would come to thee, My sweet and bonnie, I would come to thee !"
--	---

And shall we part again, my faithfu'
 Johnnie,
 And shall we part again ?
 "So lang's my eye can see
 That face so dear to me,
 We shall not part again,
 My sweet and bonnie,
 We shall not part again !"

OVERTURE TO "EGMONT," OP. 84 . . . LUDWIG VAN BEETHOVEN

(Born at Bonn, December 16 (?), 1770; died at Vienna, March 26, 1827.)

This overture was composed in 1810; it was published in 1811. The music to Goethe's play—overture, four entr'actes, two songs sung by Clärchen, "Clärchen's Death," "Melodram," and "Triumph Symphony" (identical with the coda of the overture) for the end of the play, nine numbers in all—was performed for the first time with the tragedy at the Hofburg Theatre, Vienna, May 24, 1810. Antonie Adamberger was the Clärchen.

The first performance of the overture in Boston was at a concert of the Boston Academy of Music, November 16, 1844. All the music of "Egmont" was performed at the fourth and last Philharmonic concert, Mr. Zerrahn conductor, on March 26, 1859. This concert was in commemoration of the thirty-second anniversary of Beethoven's death. The programme included the "Egmont" music and the Ninth Symphony. The announcement was made that Mrs. Barrows had been engaged, "who, in order to more clearly explain the composer's meaning, will read those portions of the drama which the music especially illustrates." Mr. John S. Dwight did not approve her reading, which he characterized in his Journal of Music as "coarse, inflated, over-loud, and after all not clear." Mrs. Harwood sang Clärchen's solos. The programme stated: "The grand orchestra, perfectly complete in all its details, will consist of fifty of the best Boston musicians."

All the music to "Egmont" was performed at a testimonial concert to Mr. Carl Zerrahn, April 10, 1872, when Professor Evans read the poem in place of Charlotte Cushman, who was prevented by sickness.

This music was performed at a Symphony concert, December 12, 1885, when the poem was read by Mr. Howard Malcolm Ticknor.

When Hartl took the management of the two Vienna Court theatres, January 1, 1808, he produced plays by Schiller. He finally determined to produce plays by Goethe and Schiller with music, and he chose Schiller's "Tell" and Goethe's "Egmont." Beethoven and Gyrowetz were asked to write the music. The former was anxious to compose the music for "Tell"; but, as Czerny tells the story, there were intrigues, and, as "Egmont" was thought to be less suggestive to a composer, the music for that play was assigned to Beethoven. Gyrowetz's music to "Tell" was performed June 14, 1810, and it was described by a correspondent of a Leipsic journal of music as "characteristic and written with intelligence." No allusion was made at the time anywhere to Beethoven's "Egmont."

Long and curious commentaries have been written in explanation of his overture. As though the masterpiece needed an explanation! We remember one in which a subtle meaning was given to at least

OVERTURE TO THE OPERA "LODOÏSKA."

MARIA LUIGI ZENOBIO CARLO SALVATORE CHERUBINI

(Born at Florence, Italy, on September 14, 1760; died at Paris on March 15, 1842.)

"Lodoïska," "Comédie Héroïque" in three acts, libretto by Fillette-Loreaux, music by Cherubini, was produced at the Théâtre Feydeau, Paris, on July 18, 1791. The part of the heroine, who gives her name to the opera, was taken by Julie Angélique Legrand, known on the stage as Mme. Scio. The opera was performed two hundred times within a year.

The overture is scored for two flutes, two oboes, two clarinets, two bassoons, two horns, two trumpets, bass trombone, kettledrums, and the usual strings.

There is an introduction, Adagio in D major, 4-4. The main body of the overture, Allegro vivace, D major, 4-4, is in classic and orthodox form. The chief theme, beginning pianissimo, is of a restless nature. The second theme, a plaintive melody, is announced in A minor, and then in A major. After the recapitulation section there is a coda, moderato (wood-wind used prominently), which is followed by a few brilliant measures, Allegro vivace.

This overture was performed at concerts of the Harvard Musical Association, March 21, 1872, November 23, 1876.

The story of "Lodoïska" is based on an episode in Louvet's famous romance "Faublas." The Comte de Floreski, betrothed to Lodoïska, incurs the displeasure of her father, Altano, who confides her to the care of the tyrannical Dourlinski. He guards her closely in his castle. Floreski, having long sought for her in vain, wanders in a forest on the boundary between Russia and Poland, near the castle, and there comes upon Titzikan, the chief of a Tartar band. Floreski disarms him in combat and spares his life. The grateful Tartar swears to assist him, but, learning Floreski's purpose, exclaims, "I do not come as a robber, a devastator; I come to deliver this country from the oppressing tyrant; I come to avenge this land and myself on Dourlinski." He then leaves Floreski alone with his servant. The two are tormented by hunger, and, as they wonder at the strange answer of the Tartar, a stone and then another stone fall near them, thrown from the castle tower. Written on the stones are these words: "Is it you, Floreski?" "It is you, I recognize you; deliver the unhappy Lodoïska, but be prudent." Floreski, with his servant, enters the castle. He represents himself as Lodoïska's brother, but the tyrant, whose amorous advances have been rejected by his prisoner, is suspicious. Floreski is discovered in an attempt to drug the guards. Dourlinski summons Lodoïska and threatens to slay him before her if she will not consent to wed him. At that moment the Tartars are heard without. They storm the castle. Titzikan finds Floreski and becomes his avenger and the liberator of the maiden.

This opera made Cherubini famous throughout Europe, and he was hailed as the revolutionizer of Italian opera and the reformer, if not the founder, of the French school. In spite of the overwhelming success of "Lodoïska," there were dissenting voices. It was said, for example: "Since it is easier to produce harmonies and noise—effects of purely theoretical calculation—than to create song, M. Cherubini, renouncing the Italian method, which requires imagination and fecundity, allies
